Dear Test User,

As many of you may have read, the Supreme Court of the United States has partially granted the Trump administration’s request to stay the preliminary injunctions on the 90 day travel ban. In light of this decision, the University of Utah would like to reach out to all of our newly admitted international applicants and assure all of you that we support you and we value your presence on our campus and in our community. The University administration and International Students & Scholar Services (ISSS) will continue to monitor changes to immigration policy and enforcement over the coming weeks. We encourage all of our students to read the ISSS website for current information.

ISSS will continue to update their website with new information.

You are Welcome at the University of Utah.

Please note that according to the language of the decision, we anticipate that students who have been admitted to a U.S. school, including students from the 6 countries mentioned in the travel ban, should still be able to obtain student visas. However, some students may experience slower visa processing times. As a result of these changes, the Office of Admissions is willing to make adjustments based on student need. If you are experiencing visa delay or denial that may affect your ability to start school on time in August, please contact the Office of Admissions. In these cases, we may be able to change your start date to the spring semester to accommodate the delays.

If you have any specific questions about the travel ban or visa delays, please feel free to contact the Office of Admissions at immigrationdocs@utah.edu, or ISSS directly at international@utah.edu.

Sincerely,

Office of Admissions
The University of Utah
