The following information contains answers to questions submitted by students during the “Answering Your Questions” orientation webinar on August 4, 2020. The information is reflective of the policies and procedures in place at the time of said webinar. Please note that the information in this document is subject to change at any time.

Academic Requirements

As a new student entering the U.S. for the fall semester, how many credits do I need to register for?

As a new student entering the United States for the Fall 2020 semester, you will be expected to maintain full-time enrollment. This means that you will need to take 12 semester credit hours as an undergraduate student, or 9 semester credits as a graduate student. This is a requirement in order to maintain your F-1 status while you are in the U.S.

Current U.S. Government policy guidance states that if you are a new F-1 student entering the United States, you will need to be enrolled in at least one in-person or hybrid course. This means that out of the 12 semester credits (for undergraduate students) or 9 semester credits (for graduate students), at least one class/3 semester credit hours will need to an in-person or hybrid class.

Please note that this type of flexibility to allow for online or remote coursework is a policy exception due to the COVID-19 global pandemic. It has been allowed for Spring, Summer, and Fall 2020.

Under normal circumstances, outside of the COVID-19 pandemic, international students on an F-1 student visa are only allowed to take one class, or 3 semester credit hours online, and the remainder of your classes will need to be in-person. It is possible that the U.S. Government may go back to these requirements for the Spring 2021 semester. At this time, we do not know what requirements will be in place for Spring 2021 if the COVID-19 pandemic continues.

We will continue to monitor the situation closely and inform all international students of changes in policy guidance once information becomes available. We send out emails to all international students, as well as update the information on our website.

The ISSS website (isss.utah.edu) is a primary resource for you, and we encourage you to visit our website often for updated information. If you have any questions about your specific situation, please contact us in ISSS. We are happy to answer your questions by email or set up an appointment time for you to meet with an ISSS advisor.

How can I find out which of my classes are online, hybrid, or in-person?

Since the U will be operating with a hybrid class model this Fall, this means that we will be offering classes in all modalities including in-person, fully online, hybrid (a mix of in-person and remote learning), and IVC-which stands for “Interactive Video Conferencing”.

IVC classes are taught remotely, so you do not need to be present in a classroom, but these classes are taught at a set time. If you register for an IVC course, you will need to be present during your assigned class meeting time- and all classes are taught during normal working hours in Utah’s Mountain Time Zone. If you will be taking IVC classes from outside of the U.S., please note that you may experience issues with the difference in time zones, and these classes may not be at a convenient time for the time zone that you are in.

Classes are coded as fully online are asynchronous, so you will not experience any difficulties with different time zones, and classes do not meet at a set time. Content will also be recorded and uploaded into Canvas.
You can find out more about the modality, or format type, a class will be offered in by searching the class schedule catalogue, which can be found on the Office of the Registrar website. You can also find links in the Academics section of the International Orientation Online modules.

When searching the class schedule catalogue, you can also filter to search by a specific class format, such as searching for all online or IVC courses, or even all courses that will taught in person. The class format type can be found in the course description of the course in the class schedule catalogue.

I will transfer to the University of Utah from another U.S. university or high school. Will I be required to register for three in-person or hybrid credits like other incoming international students?

If you are transferring from another U.S. school, and you have remained in the United States, you are not required to register for at least one in-person class, or 3 semester credits. This requirement in the current U.S. Government policy guidance will primarily impact new students applying for an F-1 student visa in their home country and then trying to enter the United States.

If you are transferring from another U.S. school, and you left the United States over the summer and intend to re-enter the U.S., it is our understanding that you will not need to be enrolled in at least one in-person class in order to enter the U.S. Provided that you maintained your active F-1 status at your previous institution, and were enrolled on March 9, 2020, the current policy guidance states that you will be able to take classes in any format or modality and still maintain your active F-1 status.

Can a student who attended a U.S. high school with an F-1 visa and stayed in the U.S. for the summer take all online classes from another U.S. state outside of Utah?

Yes, due to the COVID-19 global pandemic crisis, the U.S. Government is providing flexibility which allows for F-1 students who had active F-1 status on March 9, 2020 and who have maintained active F-1 status to take classes in any modality, including online. If you attended a U.S. high school on an F-1 visa and remained in the U.S. for the summer, you can take all online classes for the Fall 2020 semester. The current guidance allows for you to maintain your active F-1 status inside the U.S., but does not specify that you must be on campus. However, please note that you are required to report any changes to your U.S. address to ISSS within 10 days.

What is the academic calendar for the fall semester like, and why are there certain weeks where all classes will be moved online?

For the Fall 2020 semester:
- Classes begin on Monday, August 24
- The last day to add or drop classes is September 4
- September 4 is also the Fall 2020 tuition deadline

We will be moving to all online and remote instruction for classes September 28-October 9. After that, we intend to return to your class format or modality.

The reason for the two weeks of online instruction mid-semester is two-fold. First, this Fall it is election season in the United States, and the University of Utah will be hosting the 2020 Vice Presidential Debates on our campus. Many visitors will be on campus during that time, and additional security measures will also be in place.
Secondly, we are moving online for 2 weeks because research has shown that this break and moving to online or remote study can be beneficial in slowing any outbreaks of COVID-19. This will be a 2 week period where classes will be all online, and faculty and staff across campus will also be working remotely. It will also be a period of time where U of U Leadership can assess our current situation and make any determinations about the rest of the semester.

Classes are intended to resume their normal format, including in-person classes, on October 12.

After the Thanksgiving Holiday at the end of November, classes will be moved back online or remote to finish out the semester. This includes one week of online or remote instruction, followed by one more week of final exams - all will be taken online.

In what scenario would all classes be moved permanently online during the semester, and how would this impact my immigration status?

University of Utah Leadership are currently identifying the factors and statistics which will determine if we will need to move online for the duration of the semester. This largely depends on the COVID-19 virus spread and how effective our efforts to control any outbreaks are. If we are in a position where a large outbreak occurs on campus, and our various precautions, including physical distancing, face covering, and frequent cleaning do not work, then for the health and safety of all students, faculty, and staff, we may need to move online for the remainder of the semester.

If the U will need to pivot to all online or remote during the Fall semester, your immigration status will NOT be impacted. However, you will still need to remain enrolled in a full-time course load. This includes 12 semester credits for undergraduate students and 9 semester credits for graduate students.

After Thanksgiving break in November, all classes will be moved online. How will this impact my immigration status, and will I need to leave the U.S. at that point?

After the move to all online classes and tests after the Thanksgiving Break at the end of November, your immigration status will not be impacted and you will not need to leave the United States. You may choose to remain in the United States until the start of the Spring 2021 semester.

Once you arrive in the United States for the Fall semester, we strongly recommend against traveling. We do not know what travel restrictions may be in place in the future, and information is changing quickly due to the COVID-19 pandemic. If you choose to travel, particularly internationally, after the Thanksgiving Break at the end of November, you do so at your own risk. We cannot guarantee that you will be able to re-enter the United States for the Spring 2021 semester if you choose to leave.

You should be receiving messaging from U of U Leadership discouraging travel during the Fall semester. All students, domestic and international, are discouraged from traveling, even within the United States. If you choose to travel within the United States, you are potentially exposing yourself to COVID-19, and then when you return to campus, you are potentially exposing others as well.

We understand that this may be unwelcome news, and we understand that all students, particularly international students, want to travel within the U.S. However, due to the high rate of COVID-19 infection in the U.S., the risk of contracting the virus is much higher. When traveling to other destinations, and even during the travel process itself, you are at a higher risk of contracting COVID-19.

It is our intention to keep all of our students, faculty, and staff safe and healthy during the Fall 2020 semester, and we can best do this by all following the required precautionary measures, such as wearing face coverings when in public and on campus, practicing physical distancing from others by at least 6 feet or 2 meters.

I have an auto-immune disease or other condition that puts me at a high risk for COVID-19. In this case, can I take all online classes and still remain in the U.S. with my student visa?

If you are a new student at the University of Utah and you are not transferring from another U.S. school, you will need to be enrolled in at least one in-person or hybrid class in order to obtain your visa and enter the U.S. So this means that you will not be able to take all online classes as a new student entering the U.S.

If you would like to take all online classes, I recommend that you enroll in online classes from your home country.

If you are transferring from another U.S. school and you have been in the United States, it is our understanding under the current policy guidance that you will be able to stay in the U.S. and take all online classes.

How will course details be shared by the professor with students who are taking online classes?

Professors will typically post their syllabi and course details in Canvas before the first day of class. Check your UMail or login to Canvas to check for announcements from your professor.

How and when can I register for classes?

Students in different situations will have different registration dates. Generally, graduate students can register before undergraduate students. You can find your specific registration dates by logging into your CIS student portal, selecting the Registration tile, and then the View Your Registration Dates option from the left menu.

Who should I contact about specific questions relating to my academic program or class schedule options?

Graduate students can contact their academic program advisor directly. Undergraduate students may contact an academic advisor or the Academic Advising Center for assistance. Please visit the Academic Advising Center for information on how to make an appointment: https://advising.utah.edu/academic-advising-appts.php

Entering the U.S.

Is it OK to show an electronic copy of my I-20 at the port of entry, or do I need a printed I-20?
No. Even though the U.S. Government has allowed for flexibility during the COVID-19 pandemic and allows us to issue electronic documents, you should not show your documents in an electric format—either at your visa appointment or when you enter the U.S.

Please print off your I-20 and make sure that it is signed before attending your visa appointment or traveling. You should bring this printed document with you when you travel. If you show your I-20 in an electric format at your visa appointment or at the U.S. border, it greatly increases your chance of being denied a visa or being denied entry. It is really important that you print this document out, sign it, and bring it with you.

Are students from certain countries banned from entering the U.S. and if so, what are their options?

The U.S. president issued a Presidential Proclamation in March 2020 with prohibits individuals from traveling directly from certain countries from entering the U.S.—if they have been in that country within the last 14 days.

Countries listed in this Presidential Proclamation include:

- Iran
- China
- Brazil
- And the Schengen Area of Europe, which is comprised of 26 European States

For students traveling from the Schengen Area of Europe, exceptions have been made for students traveling with a valid F-1 student visa. Therefore, students traveling from this area should be able to enter the United States, even if they have been in one of these countries within the last 14 days.

For students traveling from Iran, China, or Brazil—exceptions are not being made at this time.

If you are student traveling from one of these countries, you have a few different options:

- You may choose to defer your admission to a future semester. This process is done through the Office of Admissions. If you are interested in deferring your admission, please contact the Office of Admissions for more information.

- You may also choose to take an all online course load from your home country.

Will I be required to quarantine after I enter the U.S.?

The University of Utah follows the United States Center for Disease Control recommendations closely. The U.S. CDC currently recommends that any individuals traveling from international destinations self-quarantine for 14 days upon arrival. The University of Utah strongly encourages for students to self-quarantine if they will be arriving from an international destination.

If you will be living on campus, you will be tested for COVID-19 upon arrival. You will be expected to self-isolate in your room until your test results come back. If you are negative for COVID-19, then you will not need to self-isolate or quarantine for 14 days. If you test positive, then you will be moved into a dedicated self-isolation or quarantine room in University Housing, and staff will ensure that meals are brought to your room, as well as necessities that you may need.

What is the latest date that I can safely attempt to enter the U.S. for the fall semester?
If you will need to arrive late, so that is any time after the first day of class, which is August 24, you should let ISSS know immediately of your travel plans. Depending on when you are scheduled to arrive, ISSS will issue a letter of support to you, and also coordinate with your professors so that they know of your travel plans.

Any time that you are arriving after the first day of classes, which again is August 24, there is risk involved. Customs and Border Protection officers at the border will look at your I-20 immigration document and at the start date listed on it. For the Fall 2020 semester, the start date will be August 24. If you are entering after that date, it is Customs and Border Protection’s decision to allow for you to enter.

Students generally have certain flexibility to enter the U.S. for 2-3 weeks after the start date listed on the I-20. However, if you are planning to arrive more than 3 weeks late, the risk of being denied entry goes up.

For the Fall 2020 semester only, ISSS has created an E-form that you may submit to request documentation for your late arrival. If you will be arriving in the US between August 25, 2020 and September 4, 2020, please submit the “Late Arrival Letter Request” E-form on UAtlas.

Please Note: This E-form will request that you input a contact from your academic department so they may confirm that they are aware of your late arrival and approve your plan to enter the US after the semester begins. It is extremely important that you are in contact with your academic advisor and professor(s) prior to submitting your Late Arrival Letter Request E-form to ensure that they are aware of your situation and plans to arrive late.

If you will be arriving after September 4, 2020, the risk becomes much higher the later that you plan to arrive. We do not recommend attempting to enter the U.S. after mid-September. Not only will the risk of entry denial go up, but you will also be missing key aspects of your classes, and you may fall behind. It does not put you in the best position to have a successful semester.

This year, with the COVID-19 pandemic, we are not sure what to expect at the border because this is a new situation for all of us. Therefore, we encourage you to be as careful as possible, print all of your documents and bring them with you in your carry-on when you travel, and try to enter as close to the start of classes as possible.

Why am I discouraged from entering the U.S. more than weeks after school has started?

If you will be arriving after September 4, 2020, the risk becomes much higher that Customs and Border Protection officers may deny your entry into the United States the later that you plan to arrive. We do not recommend attempting to enter the U.S. after mid-September. Not only will the risk of entry denial go up, but you will also be missing key aspects of your classes, and you may fall behind. It does not put you in the best position to have a successful semester.

This year, with the COVID-19 pandemic, we are not sure what to expect at the border because this is a new situation for all of us. Therefore, we encourage you to be as careful as possible, print all of your documents and bring them with you in your carry-on when you travel, and try to enter as close to the start of classes as possible.
Is it OK to travel after I enter the U.S. as long as I stay in Utah?

Since the United States is still in the midst of the COVID-19 crisis, there is risk involved any time that you travel within the United States, even in the state of Utah. Travel by car is recommended as the safest form of transportation if you decide to travel. The U encourages students to follow all necessary health precautions to best ensure your safety and the safety of others on campus once you return. If you choose to travel within the state of Utah, we encourage you to try to remain outdoors as much as possible, wear a face covering whenever you are inside or places where physical distancing is not possible, and frequently wash your hands or use hand sanitizer. If you will be living on campus, please make sure that your roommates are comfortable with you traveling, even within the state of Utah. Once you return, please make sure to continue to monitor your health and report any symptoms of COVID-19 to Housing staff.

Immigration

I graduated from a U.S. high school, and my I-20 is being transferred to the U. Do I need to pay for my new I-20?

No, you do not need to pay a fee to transfer your immigration record to the University of Utah, nor to receive your new I-20 from the University of Utah. The Office of Admissions will issue your transfer I-20 to you once they have received all required documents.

Can I proceed with my visa application while border closures are in place?

While you may proceed with your visa application while travel restrictions and border closure are in place, we strongly encourage you to monitor the situation and how it may impact your travel plans. If travel restrictions will prevent you from entering the United States for the Fall 2020 semester, we recommend considering taking all online classes from your home country or deferring your admission start date to a future semester.

If I start classes online from my home country, how will this impact my OPT and CPT opportunities?

At this time, U.S. Government immigration policy does not address how any of the changes as a result of COVID-19 will impact OPT opportunities. Therefore, unfortunately, we do not have answers at this time.

We will share any updates or changes to immigration policy with you as that information becomes available. We share information through email as well as on our website.

However, if you are starting your classes online from your home country, we do not expect for it to impact your chances to apply for OPT or CPT in the future.

As a new student, taking all online classes from your home country, and without an F-1 student visa, you are not held to the same restrictions as students on a visa. Therefore, we do not expect that it will impact you. However, this information is subject to change, and we will notify all international students if new information becomes available to us.

If I take mostly online classes this fall, will I be eligible for a Summer 2021 internship?

Your eligibility for a Summer 2021 internship will not be impacted by taking online classes. We will count any time where you maintained full-time enrollment (12 semester credit hours for undergraduate students; 9 semester credit hours or 3 thesis credit hours for graduate students) and had active F-1 status towards the time that you need to accrue to be eligible to apply for CPT for an internship.
Can incoming PhD and Master’s students take all online classes this fall from their home country?

From an immigration perspective, it will not impact your future immigration status if you choose to begin your program of study with all online classes this Fall 2020 semester. However, your ability to take all online classes for your first semester will depend on the course offerings in your academic department. We encourage you to contact your academic advisor in your department for more information about specific course offerings available online to new students.

With all the confusing immigration news lately, is there any chance my student visa could be revoked, or I could be deported?

We certainly understand your concerns. Immigration policy and guidance is changing rapidly as it evolves during the continued COVID-19 global pandemic. We are not able to predict what may happen in the future.

However, current policy guidance allows is somewhat flexible for new students entering the United States to attend school. Although you do need to be enrolled in at least one in-person or hybrid class in order to obtain your F-1 student visa and enter the U.S., you can take your other classes in other formats—such as online or remote learning.

Provided that you remain enrolled in a full-time course load, which is 12 semester credit hours for undergraduate students and 9 semester credit hours for graduate students, you will be able to maintain your status and remain in the U.S.

Under current policy guidance, if the University of Utah will need to transition to all online or remote classes, as a result of the spread of COVID-19, you should be able to maintain your status and remain in the United States.

We do not anticipate that any new students who are enrolled full-time, in at least one in-person or hybrid class will experience issues with your visa being revoked, or deportation.

Will the ISSS office be open during the fall semester, and if not, how can I meet with an immigration advisor?

Yes, the ISSS Office will be open during this Fall 2020 semester. In fact, the ISSS Office never closed, although ISSS staff were working remotely from March 2020 through July 2020 in order to best meet physical distancing requirements. The ISSS Office will be open in a limited capacity during the Fall 2020 semester. In order to best protect the health of all students and staff, we will be physically open, with only a few staff members being in the office, and everyone else will continue to work remotely. Our phone lines will be open and available, so you are welcome to call us with questions, or if you would like to set up an appointment with an International Advisor. If you would like to contact us outside of our phone hours (9:00-2:00 PM, Monday-Friday), please send an email to international@utah.edu and we will respond to your question as soon as possible.

All advising appointments will be conducted virtually or over the phone (your choice). We will not be offering in-person advising appointments during the Fall 2020 semester.

If there are any changes in our office’s availability or hours, we will share that information with you by email, as well as on our website.

I fear that I may struggle in my classes with everything going on. What can I do if I need academic support or if I need to reduce my course load?
If you find that you are struggling with your classes, many resources are available to you. The Learning Center will be offering free tutoring to all University of Utah students during the Fall. https://learningcenter.utah.edu/

Additionally, if you need assistance with writing essays or papers, the University Writing Center is an excellent resource for you.

If you are looking for help beyond your academics, many resources are available to you, including:

- University Counseling Center
- Center for Student Wellness
- Women’s Resource Center
- LGBTQ Resource Center
- Financial Wellness Center

We also encourage you to contact ISSS if you are seeking help and you are unsure where to go. We will direct you to the correct resources.

If you are interested in reducing your course load, please remember that in order to maintain your active F-1 status you will need to be enrolled in a full time course load (12 semester credit hours undergraduate and 9 semester credit hours graduate). If you would like to drop below that requirement, you will need to be eligible to do so, or you risk falling out of status.

If you have a medical condition that makes it difficult for you to temporarily succeed in your studies, you may be eligible to apply for a Medical Reduced Course Load. This allows for you to drop below full-time enrollment, and even to zero credits. However, you must be working closely with a licensed medical practitioner and be able to get a letter from a qualifying licensed medical practitioner to submit with your request for a medical reduced course load. You can apply for a medical reduced course load through ISSS. If you think that you may be qualify and you are interested in applying for this benefit, please contact ISSS to set up an appointment with an International Advisor.

A Medical Reduced Course load is per semester, so if you will need another semester on Medical Reduced Course Load, you will need to apply.

You can find out more about a Medical Reduced Course Load by reading the ISSS policy guide.

Admissions

I deferred my admission to Spring 2021. What happens if I can’t come then?

If you are an undergraduate student, and you are unable to come for the Spring 2021 semester, the Office of Admissions will permit the option to extend your deferment to Fall 2021. If you are in this situation, please contact the Office of Admissions at IAO@utah.edu.
If you are a graduate student, and you are unable to come for the Spring 2021, please contact your academic department and explain your situation. Your academic department will need to request an extension of your deferment to Fall 2021 through the Office of Admissions.

Can I defer my admission if my visa appointment is cancelled?

Undergraduate students: Yes, the Office of Admissions can defer an admission decision for students who have experienced a visa appointment cancellation due to COVID-19. If your visa appointment is cancelled, please contact the Office of Admissions at IAO@utah.edu.

Graduate students: Yes, with department approval the Office of Admissions can defer an admission decision for students who have a visa appointment cancellation due to COVID-19. Please contact your academic department to discuss your specific situation. If your academic department approves the deferral, they will need to request the deferral through the Office of Admissions on your behalf.

How do I defer my admission?

Undergraduate students: To request deferment, please contact Office of Admissions Deferment Coordinator, Todd Taylor at admissions_deferment@utah.edu.

Graduate students: Please contact your academic department to request a deferral. If approved through your academic department, then they will need to coordinate the request through the Office of Admissions.

How can I check on the status of my new I-20?

For newly admitted or deferred students, please contact immigrationdocs@utah.edu to check the status of your new I-20. If you are a student who is already enrolled in classes for Fall 2020 and will be entering the U.S. for the Spring 2021 semester, please contact ISSS at international@utah.edu if you have any questions about the status of your new I-20.

As a transfer student, when will I get my I-20?

As a transfer student, your new I-20 will be issued by the Office of Admissions. Once the Office of Admissions has received all required documentation and your SEVIS record is released to the University of Utah from your previous institution, an I-20 will be issued in 1-2 business days. Please check your immigration checklist for any missing items.

What is the deadline to submit my academic transcripts?

Admitted students who have not submitted final official transcripts will have a hold placed on their academic record. Holds for outstanding academic transcripts will be added the day following the tuition due date for the term for which you were admitted. For the Fall 2020 semester, the tuition due date is September 4, 2020. Please note, this admission credential hold will only prevent registration for future terms, and will not prevent you from registering for classes for the Fall 2020 semester.

If I defer to the spring semester, can I just use the same I-20 I received for the fall semester, or do I need to request a new I-20?

You will need a new I-20 for the Spring 2021 semester. You should NOT use the I-20 issued to you for the Fall 2020 semester. The new I-20 will have a start date for the Spring 2021 semester. If you are deferring your admission, and not taking classes online for the Fall 2020 semester, you will receive your new I-20 from the Office of Admissions. Please contact them at IAO@utah.edu if you have any questions about this process.

Other

Does tuition include insurance fees?

If you will be inside the U.S. this fall, you will be automatically enrolled in the U of U Student Health Insurance plan. You will see the charge for your insurance listed separately in your bill for the semester. You can find this bill in your CIS student portal.

The post-arrival checklist mentioned a welcome gift bag. Can I still pick it up next semester if I don’t come to campus this fall?

We want all students to receive a welcome gift of some kind, even if you are deferring your admission. If you come to campus in a future semester, you will have the chance to receive a welcome bag or other type of item to welcome you to campus.

What resources and services will be available for international students taking online classes (virtual tutoring/advising, library e-books, etc.)?

There is a very helpful guide for all the resources that will be available to you to help with online learning. Please see the guide here: https://it.utah.edu/help/it_guides/new_student_guide.php

What tuition payment options are available for the fall semester?

You can apply for a payment plan through CIS. You can choose either a 4- or 5-month plan. For further instructions, please visit the Financial & Business Services website: https://fbs.admin.utah.edu/income/payment_plans/

If I’m on the waitlist for on-campus housing this fall, do I need to pay the waitlist fee again for the spring semester if I’m still not able to secure on-campus housing?

You may be required to take certain steps to roll your waitlist status over to the next semester. Log into your Housing U portal or email info@housing.utah.edu for updates on the waitlist.

Where can I find a tuition and fees schedule?

For all dates related to the upcoming semester, please visit the calendar listed on the Office of the Registrar's website: https://registrar.utah.edu/academic-calendars/fall2020.php
